The Los Angeles County Arboretum & Botanic Garden welcomes over 250,000 annual visitors from the local community and abroad. With more than 82 million households in the United States participating in garden-related activities, there is no question as to why green spaces are so desirable for human interaction.

Cultivating natural, horticultural and historic resources for learning, enjoyment and inspiration is the primary focus for this 127-acre arboretum and botanic garden. Many natural paths lead to priceless historic structures that date back to 1840. The water features include ponds, streams and a natural lake that spans some 4 acres and create a sanctuary for a variety of wildlife. Visitors can explore specialty gardens, enjoy a tram tour, receive free plant advice, explore new ideas in the library, become a volun-
